

Could you be a born survivor?

Dare to dream big!

As mathematicians, we will be recapping all learning to ensure we are masters of the subject.

As writers, we will take inspiration from the book, 'Holes' by Louis Sachar to write our own survival stories. As well as that, we will write letters as the campers and play around with our use of language to make the camp appear appealing to tourists.

As RE enthusiasts, we will be learning about religions in the local community and considering what would make Rotherham a respectful community.

As scientists, we will find out what our body needs to survive and be able to identify different parts of the body. As well as that, we will experiment on the effects of exercise on our body, both externally and internally.

As artists and designers, we will be considering what food we must eat in order to survive most effectively and creating these dishes.

As readers, we will continue to develop our skills in preparation for future tests. After these have been completed, we will complete a series of projects based on our quality text, 'Holes'.

In computing, we will be using Microsoft excel to record data that we have measured using data loggers. Using this software, we will represent data using tables and graphs.

As athletes, we will be participating in a range of unusual sports through our residential. Furthermore, we will be developing our track and field skills in preparation for sports day.

Developing Socially – we will...

use many areas of team work and team building skills on our residential and in our following tasks, including our reflection.

Developing Morally – we will...

support each other through adversities with some of the more challenging and physical tasks of this survival topic.

Developing Culturally – we will...

consider different communities through our RE learning.

Developing Spiritually – we will...

use imagination and creativity in our learning.

Promoting British Values

In our RE learning, we will be democratic through our decision making as well as showing tolerance of others' ideas and feelings in the group. We will consider the rule of law and individual liberty whilst reading our book, 'Holes' as it is about children who have broken the law and are at a correctional camp.
